

You don't have to be a hunter, logger or a bootlegger to enjoy these stories!

It started in 1885 when an adventurous young farmer from New London, Wisconsin, trekked north by rail to become a lumberjack. A love of the woods and waters near Florence, Wisconsin, would become a family tradition that continues to this day.

More than just the places have been the people who are memorable—the relationships of caring, sharing and love that have developed between family members, neighbors and friends from all walks of life.

And the stories—from the logging and hunting camps near Florence to the tales of farmers and bootleggers who hailed from New London—have been passed down from generation to generation. Many of the stories were passed on by my dad, Alton E. Hutchison, to whom this book is dedicated. He was the second generation lumberjack and hunter and leader of “Hutch’s Gang.”

And, as he would say at the conclusion of each story...“It’s the truth, by God!”
